

“On Attaining Buddhahood”
(“Issho jobutsu sho”)

1255 (Age 34)

If the minds of the people are dark, their land is also dark, but if their minds are clear, so is their land. There are not two different lands, pure or impure in themselves. The difference lies solely in the positive or negative states of our minds. The differences between a Buddha and a common mortal can be understood in the same way. While deluded, one is considered a common mortal, but once enlightened, he is understood as a Buddha.

(Gosho p46. 一生成仏抄)

Nichiren Shoshu Myosenji

“On Attaining Buddhahood”
(“Issho jobutsu sho”)

1255 (Age 34)

If the minds of the people are dark, their land is also dark, but if their minds are clear, so is their land. There are not two different lands, pure or impure in themselves. The difference lies solely in the positive or negative states of our minds. The differences between a Buddha and a common mortal can be understood in the same way. While deluded, one is considered a common mortal, but once enlightened, he is understood as a Buddha.

(Gosho p46. 一生成仏抄)

Nichiren Shoshu Myosenji