

“On Emperor Sushun”

(“Sushun tennō-gosho”)

September 11, 1277 (Age 56)

It is extremely rare to be born a human being. The chances can be likened to the amount of soil that one can place on a fingernail. Furthermore, it is difficult to maintain one’s life, which is as transient as morning dew on grass. It is more important to live with honor for even a single day, than to live for 120 years, but die in disgrace.

(Gosho p. 1173 / Selected Gosho Passages p.178)

Nichiren Shoshu Myosenji

“On Emperor Sushun”

(“Sushun tennō-gosho”)

September 11, 1277 (Age 56)

It is extremely rare to be born a human being. The chances can be likened to the amount of soil that one can place on a fingernail. Furthermore, it is difficult to maintain one’s life, which is as transient as morning dew on grass. It is more important to live with honor for even a single day, than to live for 120 years, but die in disgrace.

(Gosho p. 1173 / Selected Gosho Passages p.178)

Nichiren Shoshu Myosenji