This is what the Lotus Sutra refers to in the passage, “the most difficult to believe and the most difficult to understand.” Many people accept the Lotus Sutra upon hearing it. However, it is rare to find those who “remember and never forget [what they have been taught]” when the great hardships that they have heard about actually befall them.

Accepting is easy, but continuing is difficult. Even so, one must maintain one’s faith in order to attain Buddhahood. Those who uphold this sutra must be prepared to undergo hardships. However, there is no doubt that, “they will be able to instantly attain the unsurpassed Buddha way.”

To uphold this sutra means to indelibly etch into one’s heart Nam-Myoho-Renge-Kyo, which is the most precious to all the Buddhas of the three existences.
