

Questions and Answers between a Sage and an Unenlightened Man
(Shogu mondo-sho)

March 21, 1277 (Age 56)

The human heart is like water that conforms to the shape of its container, and the nature of things is like the moon's reflection buffeted by waves. Therefore, while you may say that your faith is unshakable, one day in the future, your resolve is bound to weaken. Devils and demons may come before you, but you must not be swayed by them. The Devil of the Sixth Heaven detests Buddhist Law, and non-Buddhists despise Buddhism. However, you must be like the mountain of gold that brightens when a boar brushes against it, like the ocean filled by many streams, like a fire that intensifies when wood is added and like the kalakula insect that grows larger by feeding on the wind. Then, how can the outcome be anything but positive?
